PRESS RELEASE AUTUMN/WINTER 15

Craig Green's second solo show at London Collections: Men through the NEWGEN Men initiative, presents his deepest exploration of uniform to date.

Experimenting with an array of utilitarian details, the rhythm of institution is enacted through a look-by-look play between restriction and release.

Focusing on the contrast between protection and vulnerability, silhouettes range from second-skin close, to an almost figure dwarfing assembly of several layers. With the same sentiment, materials range from crisp white shirting and simple jerseys, individually manipulated directly onto the body, to hard-wearing cotton drills and waterproofs with a dynamic sheen.

Whilst surface decoration remains minimal, textural interest is offered through tunneled components, which spill from the peripheries of garments. Together with a cavalcade colour concept, an idea of concealed power is presented.
