Le Loft, of Rue Saint- Antoine 28

Craig Green remains the answer to the question "What is brilliant in British menswear right now?" according to the Guardian. The designer has recently shown his new collection that gives emphasis to attention of detail, freedom in form and neo-romanticism juxtaposed with energy and power. Red, white, blue, orange, yellow and green monochrome looks, a variety in lines and textures reminiscent of work apparel and martial arts uniforms, symbolic notations on identity and gender and minimal androgynous figures complement the British designer's proposals for SS 2016.

Craig Green's third solo show was recently presented at London Collections: Men through the NEWGEN MEN initiative, shortly after the launch of his first AW15 campaign that has been photographed by Nick Knight. The collection can now be seen in Paris at London Show Rooms Men from June 26th to June 30th.

Atopos cvc has been following and supporting Craig Green through the 'Mon Petit Chou' project since the beginning of his career. 'Mon Petit Chou' is a project created by Atopos to observe and to assist in a supportive and collaborative way the progress of emerging young artists from the beginning of their careers. In return, the artists provide Atopos with examples of their work which then becomes part of the Atopos Collection.

Craig Green is presently participating in "China: Through the Looking Glass" exhibition at the Metropolitan Museum of Art, New York, until August 2015. Furthermore, Atopos is currently exhibiting from its collection a selection of his work from his very first show up to his most recent as part of the Atopos Unlocked program.
