Craig Green's "highly conceptual work has captivated the global fashion press, drawing many - well deserved, mind you - comparisons to the almighty Rei Kawakubo" according to Highsnobiety. The British designer has recently presented his new proposals for AW16 where his recurring love of uniform and utilitarian design was tackled from a fresh perspective. Emulating the natural wear of long-serving garments, a gentler quality is offered through careful aging and tarnishing techniques, that aim to imbue a sense of memory.

Craig Green's fourth solo show was presented at London Collections: Men through the NEWGEN MEN initiative. The collection can be seen in Paris at D /ARK /CONCEPT from January 22nd to January 26th.

Atopos cvc has been following and supporting Craig Green through the 'Mon Petit Chou' project since the beginning of his career. 'Mon Petit Chou' is a project created by Atopos to observe and to assist in a supportive and collaborative way the progress of emerging young artists from the beginning of their careers.

Atopos cvc takes part in the 'Utopian Bodies: Fashion Looks Forward' exhibition, with costumes from the Atopos Collection, among which is a beautiful Craig Green piece. The exhibition is organized by Liljevalchs Konsthall in Stockholm and will be open until February 7th.
